

Acupuncturist treats Dry Macular Degeneration

Wren Willow, Doctor of Oriental Medicine is treating new patients for dry macular degeneration, a debilitating eye disease, which affects eyesight, progressively.

Acupuncture, which has been used for centuries for reducing physical pain, is now recognized as an effective medicine to treat the effects of dry macular degeneration. This is good news for patients, many of who have faced limited treatment choices with little effects. Now they can get lasting relief from acupuncture treatments that are relaxing and have no side effects.

“This is exciting news” said Dr. Willow. “ I’m grateful for the opportunity to do something for people who may have given up on things, we take for granted.” All it takes is a commitment to several weeks of treatments.

Unlike medications, acupuncture is designed to fit the specific need of each client and does not come with side effects.

For additional information or to arrange interviews,
please contact:

Dr. Wren Willow, DOM, 505.660.2305

or visit her website at www.wren-willow.com